"A Home Run."

which will be seen at the Grand on Wednesday, September 14, is a satire on the national craze—baseball. If the New York dramatic prophets, whose Mecca is Union Square, are to be relied on, it is far and away funnier than anything yet presented to the public in this form of the drama. As per the bills, it is in three acts and ten innings.

The leading characters are of course the umpire, and that necessary adjunct of every well-regulated ball team, the mascot. The company is strictly first-class and includes the names of several New York favorites.

Mexico's Hotels and Restaurants.

The hotels are as poor as they are numerous, and like the servant girl question in the states, it is a never failing source of gossip and complaint to the American sojourner and tourist. There is not a hotel here that would rank in the third class in any of the principal cities in the states. All the comforts and conveniences of an American hotel are lacking. The restaurants are as poor as the hotels. The service is abominable and the cooking miserable. The meat used is usually tender, but lacks maturity and solidity, and gives the impression that it was "pulled before becoming ripe."

The vegetables convey the same impression, especially at this season, when raised by irrigation. Spices are now abundant and cheap, yet they are not to be had at the principal restaurants. Should you buy some in the market and take them to your restaurant to be served as a dessert the cook will invariably spoil them by a deluge of boiling milk. Cream is unknown here, and butter—never ask for it or you will regret having done so. The bread is made in the style of French rolls. The crust requires a hammer or a very sharp knife and a strong arm to penetrate it, and when you have done so you will find that the center indicates poor cooking and worse flour. Muffins, hot rolls, biscuit and griddle cakes are unknown. The prayer of the tourist is for a first class hotel, a comfortable and conducted on either the American or European plan, or both—Mexico Letter.

Will Know Better Next Time.

A few days ago Col. Ingersoll was passing through Pittsburgh. He, with a great many other passengers, went into the dining hall for breakfast. He was soon approached by a beardless boy reporter of the Post, who saluted him with:

"How are you, colonel? How are things looking out west?" The colonel turned half around in his chair and said abruptly:

"No, I thank you; I never play cards."

The reporter explained who he was, but the colonel would not listen to him. The reporter, however, was equal to the emergency, and he wrote nearly a column story of the attempt of a confidence man to get the best of Ingersoll. Since the colonel's return to New York he has received the congratulations of an army of friends.

"An interview," he said yesterday, would not have caused me one-half the annoyance."—New York World.

Butler in New Orleans.

Gen. George A. Sheridan relates this story, which he picked up in New Orleans. A delegation of citizens of that place visited President Lincoln and begged him to remove Gen. Butler from command there. The president listened while they presented their thousand and one grievances, and then said: "Well, gentlemen, you have done one good thing for me, for by his wise sanitary regulations he has kept the yellow fever out." One of the delegates, a creole, skipped before the president and replied excitedly: "Pardon, Mistah President, pardon; it was not Butler who kept the fever away from the city; it was God. He sent a little mercy for our poor people. He do not send Ben Butler and his yellow fever ze same reason; no saire." The president laughed heartily, but all the same Gen. Butler was kept in command.—New York Tribune.

A Brand New Theory.

Aspiring Author—I have here, sir (taps roll), an entirely new theory about a battle of Gettysburg, which I would like to submit to you.

Editor (wearily)—I dislike to respond to that; but a new theory—that is it in brief?

Aspiring Author—That there never was any battle of Gettysburg. (Dull thud on office stairs.)—Harper's Bazar.

The Theatre Treasurer.

He knows everybody who goes to the theatre and pays for his seat. He is never known to knowingly know a deadhead. I have seen him change from a smiling, affable Ben Bummel, selling a fifth row dress circle ticket to a pretty miss, to a hopelessly dead and blind old man, upon the mere appearance of the theatrical trunk known as the deadhead.—St. Louis Republican.

Ink That Will Fade.

To make an ink, black at the time of writing, but which shall disappear after a short time, but not galls in aqua vitae, put Roman vitriol and sal ammoniac to it, and when cold dissolve a little gum in it. Writing done with this ink will vanish in twenty-four hours.—Scientific American.

A Frenchman, M. Jean Mariel, invites all the Jews of the world to the Maccabean gascar and establish there a great Hebrew empire.

—see Farmers of Paris.

Paris is a community of farmers. The people love flowers, more fruits and float in elysian couch at the sight of potatoes. It is not enough to buy fruits and vegetables at the markets; they must be cultivated, raised on native soil. It may readily be supposed that farming proceeds under difficulties in this city; but, nevertheless, proceed it does and the products of agricultural toil are yearly exhibited in a big show at the Salon de la Ville. Such a show has just been held, and the exhibition consists solely of vegetable products that grew within the city limits. The people who do the farming are artists. They are not asked by the Parisian passion for everything that is agreeable to the eye, to the sense of smell and to the taste. In the broad meadow or in the little patch of earth no bigger than a handkerchief, rescued from the omnipresent paving, it is their aim to impel nature, and they succeed. Their exhibition is astonishing. One hundred and fifty varieties of potatoes are displayed. There were a hundred varieties of roses, including some new ones.—Paris Cor. Philadelphia Times.

LARGE CIRCLES AND MINOR.

When Jay Gould scribbled off a check for $1,500,000 to pay Tom Allen for the Iron Mountain road, it was thought to be the largest individual check ever written. Gould wrote it on a sheet of note paper. John R. Alley once dashed off a check for $300,000 and gave it to Senator Dorsey for a half interest in the senator's cattle ranch. There are several United States government checks for one cent, to square up accounts, in existence.—Chicago Herald.

Use for Old Iron Ropes.

Old iron ropes which have been used in ship shafting are now utilized at the Canuck Chase collieries as conductors for conveying electricity to light the mines and work overhauling. They are insulated with tar-paulin and laid in troughs among coal dust.—Frank Leslie's.

At Wittenberg.

There are over one hundred new students at Wittenberg college, and the year promises to be the most successful in the history of the institution.
